Houston Executive Airport Officially Opens for Business

BROOKSHIRE -- (January 26, 2007) – After more than 2 years of planning and construction, Houston Executive Airport has officially opened for business. The announcement was made today by Houston Executive Airport owner, Ron Henriksen.

“I am delighted to announce the opening of the newest airport in the country right here in West Houston,” said Henriksen. “Houston Executive Airport is poised to significantly impact the Houston area and provide unparalleled service to the business aviation market.”

Houston Executive Airport Executive Director, Andrew D. Perry, A.A.E., acknowledged the airport’s dedicated team. “This is an exciting day not only for Ron and myself, but also for the many people who have devoted hundreds of hours of hard work to make this airport the first class aviation center that it is today.” Perry said a grand opening event would take place in Spring 2007.

Houston Executive Airport (HEA) is a private commercial development established by a former commercial pilot and Houston native, Ron Henriksen. Houston Executive Airport is located west of Houston in an area of rapid growth and business development. HEA will cater to business and general aviation aircraft. With an eye for coming growth, Henriksen has long-range plans for the airport’s runway to be extended to 7,000 feet to accommodate larger aircraft.

Perry said a feature of Houston Executive Airport is the Henriksen Jet Center. "Henriksen Jet Center will provide services such as aircraft fueling, ground handling operations, rental cars and all the amenities needed to provide premium service for the business air traveler visiting West Houston," said Perry. Chevron Global Aviation was recently named the airport's fuel supplier.
